

PET HELP RESOURCES
For residents of Alamance County
(and surrounding areas)

Before you surrender, have you tried all your options?

Burlington Animal Services makes every effort to save the lives of the animals in our care. Even so, any animal surrendered to Burlington Animal Services may potentially be euthanized for health, behavior, or space issues. Please make surrendering your animal your last option.

Below are some resources and options for common problems that animal owners face. Please feel free to discuss your concerns with our staff—we are here to help you!

Behavior problems

Most behavioral problems are due to boredom and/or frustration and can be resolved with simple exercise, attention, and consistency. Obedience training can be very helpful in solving many problems. If your pet is having behavioral problems, consider enrolling your pet in a local dog training class or consult a pet behaviorist.

Barking

Nuisance barking is usually due to boredom, frustration, or anxiety. If your dog is excessively barking, please consider:

- Is your dog getting enough exercise? Dogs need daily exercise. Consider taking your dog for a walk at least once every day!
- Does your dog have access to food, water, shelter, toys, etc.? Your dog may be barking because he is lacking a basic need. Dogs not only need basic necessities like food, water, and shelter, but they also need enrichment items—such as toys—to help prevent boredom.
- Have you tried obedience training?
- If you are leaving your dog outdoors in your absence, can you put him/her indoors? Your dog will have fewer distractions indoors and thus fewer reasons to bark. Not to mention, a dog barking indoors is less likely to disturb your neighbors than a dog barking outdoors.

You can find free resources on barking online at:

- Barking:
http://www.spcawake.org/site/DocServer/Barking_spcawc.pdf?docID=181

Chewing and Other Destructive Behavior

Dogs need and like to chew. As puppies, they chew when they are cutting new teeth, but adult dogs enjoy chewing, too. Chewing releases boredom, frustration, and anxiety. If your dog is chewing destructively, please consider:

- Does your dog have plenty of appropriate chew toys?
- If your dog chews destructively all the time, is he/she getting plenty of exercise and attention?
- Have you tried obedience training?
- If your dog chews destructively only when left alone, have you tried crate training? If destructive behavior occurs in your absence, crating your pet can be very helpful in eliminating these problems. When properly trained, the crate becomes a “den-like” place for your pet and will provide a safe and comfortable place for him/her while you are away. See: http://www.spcawake.org/site/DocServer/Crate_Training_Your_Dog.pdf?docID=3842

Housetraining

House training takes patience and consistency. Here are some tips on training your dog:

- A young puppy needs to release himself/herself every couple of hours. Be sure to give your dog plenty of chances to go outside and relieve himself/herself.
- Take your dog outside, and praise him/her when the dog relieves himself/herself outside. Give him/her verbal praise, a pat on the head, and/or a treat.
- Let your dog go outside immediately if you see signs that he/she needs to go to the restroom, including whining, sniffing, going to the door, and turning in circles.
- Are you leaving your dog alone for too long? If so, consider getting someone to take your dog outside for you. You can also consider crate training, as dogs will not typically use the restroom in their own crates.
- Is your dog neutered? This may cut down on your dog urinating in the house.
- When there is an accident, clean the area thoroughly with an enzymatic cleaner, such as Nature's Miracle. Otherwise, the dog will just return to the same spot.
- If soiling the house is a new behavior, please consider taking your dog to a veterinarian to rule out medical problems.

Housing

You don't necessarily have to give up your pet if you are moving. Consult People With Pets (<http://www.peoplewithpets.com/>) or My Apartment Map (http://www.myapartmentmap.com/pet_friendly/) for directories of apartments and homes that accept pets. Keep in mind that many landlords will allow well-behaved pets and responsible owners. Providing your pet's veterinary records, graduation certificates from obedience classes, and references from past landlords can help demonstrate that you are a responsible pet owner. In addition, organizations like Hope Now Alliance (<http://www.hopenow.com/hopenow-aboutus.php>) offer free counseling for homeowners hoping to avoid foreclosure.

If you are temporarily unable to keep your animal, please consider contacting Avalo (<http://www.avalohelps.org/>), formerly known as Bayou Rescue, which is a local non-profit organization that is dedicated to helping pets and people stay together in times of disaster. You reach Avalo at:

Rehoming Your Animal

If you must give up your pet, please consider trying to find a permanent home for the animal yourself. You know your pet best, so you will be the best person to advocate for your animal and find him/her a new home.

Please keep in mind, a shelter environment can be stressful for animals, so it is best if you can find them another home before they ever have to come to the shelter.

Some ideas for rehoming your animal include:

- Place an ad in the newspaper—the Times News (<http://www.thetimesnews.com/>) will run an ad regarding your pet for three days for no charge. You can also post your animal online, on sites such as <https://www.petfinder.com/>. Always ask for an adoption fee and evaluate adopters carefully. No matter your situation, it is your responsibility as the animal owner to screen prospective new owners.
- Make a poster and distribute it in your community.
- Ask friends and co-workers for help.
- Contact rescue groups. Although many rescue groups are filled to capacity, you can contact them about rehoming your pet. Below are just a few rescue groups who may be able to assist:
